THE COMMUNICATORS: Some stiff new competition has come along for the musty old National Press Club which has long suffered from a lack of press and a do-little approach) in the form of the National Communications Club, a new Washington club for professionals in all phases of communications. The new club, with a topnotch board of directors, co-chaired by Washington Post publisher Katherine Graham, is scheduled to open in October at 1225 19th Street, N.W. It promises full scale club facilities and events . . . including former Jockey Club chef Claude Bouchet.
